

Searching Google Scholar

Important: Google Scholar connects to our resources while you are on campus. (Click on link to the right of result and not the title.)

This document tells you how to search in, cite from, and find an entire article (instead of a paywall) on Google Scholar.

Searching techniques

1. Search keywords (e.g., first-wave feminism origins)
2. Narrow search by adding more words (e.g. first-wave feminism origins united states)
3. Search synonyms for your topic. e.g., women's rights, history
4. Get more results by taking out words or searching broader terms. e.g., women's rights

Find newer items or items from a specific time-period

1. Click options under "Any time" to limit to certain years.
2. Click "Sort by date" to show the newer items first.
